Knitting for wildlife

Care home residents in Saltburn-by-the-Sea, England, are busy knitting woolly elephants to raise money for rescued elephants in India. The “knitting nannas” are using their skills to support Wildlife SOS, which rescues and protects animals across the country. One resident, 95-year-old Ellen, says she feels proud to help, especially after hearing about Bani the elephant. Bani was knocked down by a train, but with special care and custom-made boots, he learned to walk again! Priced at £2, the toys are flying out the door - or should we say, stampeding out the door!

Young racing star makes history

11-year-old Harry Williams has made history by becoming McLaren’s youngest-ever signing for their young driver programme! He’s even younger than F1 legend Lewis Hamilton, who joined in 1998 aged 13. Harry only started karting in 2021 but has already raced to the top, winning the 2025 British Open Championship. He says he can’t wait to keep learning, have fun, and chase his Formula 1 dreams!

A nature-loving 10-year-old has rescued a rare Mexican axolotl from under a bridge in Wales. The surprising discovery – the first ever found in the UK – quickly turned into a rescue when Evie noticed the axolotl had injuries to its stomach and tail. Now named Dippy, the creature was taken to safety and is being carefully looked after by Evie and her family. Axolotls are endangered in the wild, with only around 50 to 1,000 left globally.

Turning dog poo into pounds!

Leatham Bilsland from Scotland has launched his own business at just 13 – picking up dog poo! He got the idea while helping his mum with her dog walking job and turned it into his service, “Doggy Doo Doo.” Even though it’s a messy task, Leatham stays positive by listening to music while he works. He’s already donated some of his hard-earned money to charity, and is now hoping to use the rest to travel to London to see Beetlejuice the Musical!

Meatball lollipop: Yum or yuck?

What started as an April Fools’ joke has turned into a real treat, IKEA is bringing a meatball-flavoured lollipop to life! Teaming up with Chupa Chups, the lollipop will be a sweet take on IKEA’s famous Swedish meatballs. The idea first appeared in a fun social media post on 1st April, but fans loved it so much that it’s now set to hit stores this June! Would you give it a try?
